into the stream went the stout fishwife Mrs. O'Leary, who, with a dash, pushing unceremoniously amongst the people, and with a pair of both axes, placed a sturdy yoman obviously in comfortable circumstances, and that too, he it said advisedly, in more respects than one. This Irishman, as he was rather loosely promulgated himself, was not at all singular in his method of proceeding, was hilariously talkative, and disputatious, on the best possible terms with himself and the whole world at large. He was ready and anxious for an argument upon any conceivable subject—ranging from the old and the new, the good and the evil, the right and the wrong, the true and the false, the heavy the light, to the character of Daniel O'Connell—from the price of pigs and corn at Shoalhaven to the nature and bearing of the ethics and politics of Aristotle. Nothing was, at that particular time, out of his head, or beyond his inspiring manner, or in his strident voice, with incoherence of knowledge, which he proudly vented forth in mangled forms for amusement or annoyance of the company. O'M. M. Regan, Mr. Regan, Mr. Michael Regan—these latter may be pardoned for the fact that they were ill-used, and that the other things, being so familiar—how happened it that in your opinion

"Stick-to-me-Bill," his farm is so steep that his two sons have to support him up the hill. While he is standing his ground at one point, the apex of his estate, you will hear him at that season shouting to his first-born—"Stick me, Bill!" "And the other," I said—"the other you should have said," is the case of a landslip. A man can be so sure of his ground that he will not expect a landslip to be the consequence. Well, his twenty-five acres slipped down upon another twenty-five acres. Who was the owner of the ground? That is the rub. It goes to the court of ———, where, even if it is decided in his favor, many a weary year will be required to get the money. The inhabitants are not lighting his cigar. "As on the paw was about the approaching visit of Prince Alfred to our shores; and as, no doubt, his Royal Highness will not depart without seeing the latest lovely proof in Majesty's wardrobe," said Bamforth. But Bamforth, determined upon meeting his Royal Highness at Richmond with a team of bullocks and a Kurrageau sleigh, and so drive him up the big hill. But I think it would not be exactly the clean, polished look the Saxon Prince would wish to see. Illusions were so strong that he was drawn upon two posts erected by two rails and secured by

Of the witnesses saving the coroner, the court, and ready to go into the box; but as the Commissioner decided that he had no jurisdiction to examine unless the witnesses had been duly summoned before him, it was acknowledged that it would be futile to proceed. It was suggested that the coroner could not examine the witnesses, but that the coroner could call them to the stand. Mr. Hancock did not care about going on, inasmuch as they could not have called any other witness until Mr. Hancock's counsel had concluded his explanatory cross-examination of the witnesses. The coroner, however, who had appeared on behalf of the assignees, took occasion to allude to the "asserting remarks" made in reference to the frequent adjournments and the apparently never-ending length of the examinations, and he then proceeded to urge the necessity of the investigation to a conclusion as speedily as possible.

A man named Joseph Colman had been committed for trial, on a verdict of a coroner's jury, on a charge of wilfully setting fire to his premises in Gloucester. A married woman named Ryder, also being held, was charged with having been the cause of the fire. The investigation was a prolonged one, and revealed a conspiracy to defraud the Victoria Insurance Company.

crime of perjury is now rare, and the practice is in the process of dying out. The reason for this is that the terrors of the law cease to operate as a check upon false witnesses, and cases are now continually decided by dint of "hard swearing." We have to desire to catalogue offences of this kind as among the most serious and most disgraceful of the crime of perjury must have painfully impressed every person accustomed to read the reports of our Police and Law Courts, whilst the remarks that have from time to time dropped both from Bench and Bar, in connection with the numerous instances of flagrant cases of these. But though perjury is often committed, it is but seldom the honour of the law is vindicated as against the perjurer, and we fear it is but seldom that a witness perjuring himself is ever subjected to any punishment. Evidence that cannot be met in any other way can be disposed of by getting witnesses to swear the contrary; and as this is the shortest and surest method, so, in the estimation of many, it is the easiest. The more unscrupulously a witness is, the better chance will he have of swearing down the opposite party, until eventually the magistrate, instead of being

For his money's sake;
When a Bishop pretends
To enlighten his friends, Try twice then how
They know no more than a cow
Of what he picked up from the Hoose.
What a wonderful creature he be, then,
With no knowledge at all,
But what gives us Metal!

! Bishop Coleman,
Don't try to teach me so,
But rather determine
To preach your next sermon
To African vermin,
Centipedes, millipedes,
And other odd "creatures."
For you must be so,
Who teacheth, you know,
One thing to his brother
Whilst paid for another.

We believe this estimate to be tolerably correct. It follows that the united Liberal party have only a majority of twenty-eight over the Conservatives.—The Prince of Wales's marriage is fixed for the 10th of March, and by the treaty with Denmark the Princess is to have a grant of £10,000 per annum, and one of £50,000 should the survivor be the Prince. The note of £50,000 should the survivor be the Prince, and the marriage will be celebrated all over the hand, and the rejoicings and the most enthusiastic loyalty. We are happy to state that the distresses of the metropolis, the day will be kept up as the general holiday.—We are happy to state that the distresses to one who he hardly ever saw. The miseries of which I felt, were almost insupportable. I was, however, saved from the danger of leaving my bones to which, in his burning sand, by a little pluck on my part, a great deal of labour, and a generous offer of the part of my animal the value of which I was not to know, in our part of Europe, and which for purposes of exploration in Australia would be invaluable. You see, I was not a very stupid fellow. My mule was nearly three years old, and I had been riding him for some time. He was two and two nights without food, and he carried me those eight hours at an average rate of six miles per hour. Notwithstanding the intense heat of Australia, I had a large blanket, and was gratified for the first time in seeing a flock of guanaco and vicuñas on the banks of the white lakes of Aconcagua. The height above the level of the sea of these charming lakes is not less than 8000 feet, but the heat is not so great as it is in the plains of the Pampas of Melbourne in February. The nights, however, were bitter cold, and the lakes are frozen over in a few hours, sufficiently hard to walk over them. I had a hundred miles, and before crossing the Cordillera, I had to cross the range of the three genera, the llama and alpaca, at various elevations, and was much pleased, on visiting a swampy lake or estate belonging to a community of nuns, in making a long excursion to the largest flock of alpacas which I had ever seen. The alpacas were not allowed a promiscuous intercourse with llamas, and it was easy to see at a glance how much of grace and symmetry the alpaca had lost by reason of its carrying so much of great damage doing to the quality of the wool. I was very glad to find this family in the Roy Park of Melbourne. I had very serious doubts whether I should have any pure Alpaca in Victoria, or if one of the males they are very few. I was disappointed, and rewarded me more for the horrible journey. I have no doubt, however, to verify by personal observation the important fact that the alpaca will live and thrive in the hottest, a colder climate, enduring all rigours and trials of a more rapid range than any extreme to the other, provided the climate be dry. The temperature at the peak of the silver cerro of this once silver city, height of more than 16,000 feet, the air is so cold, so charged with electricity that your hair goes off in a few minutes, if you comb it. Even in the rainy season, which is the best time of the year, this quality in the atmosphere continues, much that even on the snowy heights of Cuzco, Guano, and other of the highest range of the Andes, it is so cold that not so penetrating as the fog of London in the month of November. Although the city of Lima is at an elevation of some 14,000 feet above the level place. It is high time that the millions of the world should eat something better to eat than rice, a thing better to believe in than an Emperor. The Emperor of China has been deposed, the Emperor of Persia has been deposed, the Emperor of Russia has been deposed, and a few Englishmen, it may be said, for what? vast unoccupied places of the earth require to be sate and subdued. The Caledonians are said to have highly benefited by their change of climate.

"I can now with safety inform you that our expedition to New Zealand will commence in March next. Our expenses and difficulties have been great, and it is yet uncertain whether we shall ever be reimbursed or no; but I have no reason to despair of being able to explain to my friends, Mr. G. H. Dwyer, whom the labour and the danger of the voyage have nearly retarded, and to whom Australia was indebted for pure alpaca when they arrive there so far conducted to it so admirably well, that I have felt the result of the expedition to be worth the cost."

"Hoping soon to have the pleasure of again seeing you at the head of the society of which you are father, not only in Victoria but throughout Australia, again to labour with you for the future we and richer of the world, colonies of England."

"Believe me faithfully,
"A. J. DUFFIELD."

"P.S.—We have been retarded by the late rain, and we must march through floods of water otherwise we should have been in the way for some weeks. We have secured a good stock of sheep, whites, and of the most valuable breed. This becomes—if we have a prosperous voyage—the valuable stock of which Victoria may boast."

SIR WALTER CROFTON ON SECOND PUNISHMENTS.

A LECTURE was recently delivered by Sir W. Crofton, at the institution, Park-street, Bristol, on "Our Secondary Punishments." The subject, of the greatest interest at the present time, attracted numerous auditors, and many gentlemen have devoted themselves to the study of the questions brought under consideration by the lecturer.

The Very Rev. the Dean of Bristol presided, and Sir Walter the lecturer to the audience amidst cheering.

Sir Walter Crofton said it would be recollected in the year 1853 there was but one colony we would any longer receive our convict population. That colony was Western Australia, which only numbered 6000 free inhabitants. Its absorbing power was therefore extremely limited. When he told them that between the years 1853 and 1863 more than 64,375 male and female convicts had been sent to the colonies, he was

There is a more minute classification of the views maintained by the great convicts under long sentences in a special prison, the rigid discipline; but, as no colony would then, it would be best to detain them until the term of long sentences passed upon them. They must not be considered as a substitute for the convict system, but as a permanent servitude for life. Fourthly, the should have a safeguard against the possibility of the convict during the period of his sentence, which may not be the best of the conditions of the license by the Fifthly, they must use the necessary appliances for a system of records of former convictions, and of each against offenders, thus ensuring long sentences against those who are the hazard of a criminal avocation. Sixthly, the so arrange their system of deportation to Western Australia not only to send the limited number of convicts to the colony, but to increase the absorbing power of the colony by increasing the absorbing power of the colony by exercising their power under existing statutes, it is contended, would be the gradual breaking of the criminal class; secondly, a large volume of convicts, and a large volume of convicts; also, an improved and extended transportation to Western Australia; and, the incarceration in a special prison, under treatment, of dangerous criminals, that treatment of such a nature as to be a deterrent to others. In conclusion, Sir Walter Croft pressed his full confidence in the efficacy of the established, with the above view, together with the proceedings recommended for the protection of the public, and stated that the commission was at once to be appointed to into the subject; and he trusted that the result of inquiry would be that sound and criminal punishment might be administered in our penal system, and that by the household, and their system of deportation, he overcome the difficulties which undoubtedly so them; at the same time laying the foundation plan, at the crime upon the whole as one of the plan, worthy the great nation to which longed.

The lecturer resumed his seat amid great applause. On the motion of the very rev. chairman, as by Mr. Palmer, a vote of thanks was given to Sir Walter and the meeting then separated.

GREAT SOUTHERN AND

THE INTERCOLONIAL CONFERENCE—The Latitudes Examiner of the 16th says:—Mr. Adjo Donzie, one of Tainia's representatives, returned by the Harlow train. The conference was carried on with closed doors, and a resolution was adopted to the effect that the result of the deliberations should not be disclosed by individual members until each Government had received the report of its delegates. We are therefore unable at present to say what has been done, further than that generally the question has occurred on the several matters under discussion. On one point the Tainiaans—namely, to address the Queen against the resumption of transpiration.

THE CITY SEWERAGE RATES—The following

[illegible][illegible][illegible]

the gentle Rosalind—or the melancholy and philosophical Jacques—of the angelic Cordelia—of the demi-devil Iago—the paunchy, dissolute, and witty Jack Falstaff,—of the impulsive Hotspur—and the moody Hamlet. It seemed, therefore, fitting that the day should have been honoured as we do.

as proposed. The lecturer then dwelt, in eloquent and forcible language, upon the various phases of Shakespeare's genius, not merely as a dramatist, but as a guide, a philosopher, and a friend; pointing out his extraordinary power of depicting character, and drawing attention to the fact that a very large number of his tragic animating scenes have a long since become household words—their very origin being often unknown to those who use them. Various well-selected illustrations were adduced in proof of his remarks by the lecturer, who gave with much success the balcony scene from Romeo and Juliet, a variety of the most striking passages of Hamlet, and—last not least—the grand funeral oration of Mark Antony. The text scene, also, from Julius Cæsar, was delivered by Mr. Hill, assisted by his pupil—this part of the entertainment being loudly applauded. Mr. Hill intends to give one more lecture before he leaves Sydney, which is to comprise all of his most striking passages,—a final effort, in which he trusts to be supported by his friends and the public. We hope that on this last occasion he will be more fortunate in his weather.

THE CHRISTY'S MINSTRELS.—These celebrated vocalists and instrumentalists, whose highly successful engagement has already extended over a period of five weeks at the School of Arts, still continue to draw remarkably good houses. Yesterday evening there was a change of programme, the greater part of it being entirely new; and, notwithstanding the exceedingly unfavourable weather, the house was comfortably full. The overture and opening chorus were given with spirit and precision; and were followed by the song, "The old folks are gone," given by Mr. J. H. Melvyn, of whose vocalisation in this plaintive melody we have had occasion to notice previously. "Emmeline," composed by Mr. A. Nish, was beautifully rendered by Mr. C. Stewart, and was received with loud plaudits, as was also a sweet song, "We are coming, sister Mary," given by Mr. T. Rainford. "Angelina Baker" and "Tilda Horn," by Mr. J. Brown, and "The hat and feather," and "Willie has gone for a soldier," by Mr. W. Norton, were merry, fun-provoking melodies, and brought down shouts of cheers and laughter. Of the charming quartette, "Come where my love lies dreaming," in the first part, and the beautiful quartette, "Oft when night and Maying," in the second, it is only necessary to say were received with the most unmistakable marks of approval. The fact that they form part of every night's programme is the most conclusive evidence of their popularity. The "Blacksmith Chorus," from Il Trovatore, in the first part, should also be mentioned as a decided success. In the second part Mr. T. Bainford was very happy in rendering the American song, "Will-o'-the-Wisp," which narrowly escaped an encore. Mr. J. Brown, in the "Original Old Bob Ridley," and Messrs. Brown and Norton in "The Nervous Cases," created much amusement; indeed, the sallies of wit and humour and inimitable representations of neuroeccentricity of these gentlemen throughout the entertainment produced a good deal of merriment, and, doubtless, to a considerable portion of the audience, proved as attractive as the more pretentious efforts of the other members of the company. The second part of the programme terminated with a burlesque on four Swiss Sisters, represented by Messrs. Norton, Brown, Melvyn and Rainford, and so enthusiastically was it received that nothing short of a re-appearance of the "sisters" would satisfy the house. The entertainment was brought to a close with (for the last time) the burlesque of "La Sonnambulu." We understand the engagement of the Minstrels at the School of Arts will shortly terminate, when they propose to make a tour through some of the country districts.

BALMAIN.—Mrs. Charles Fanshawe Evereste gave her

"Wanderings through the Holy Land," illustrated by a moving diorama, at the School of Arts, Balmain, yesterday evening, when, notwithstanding the unfavourable weather, the attendance was very good. There were about 400 children (who were admitted free) also present. The entertainment appeared to give great satisfaction.

ROYAL VICTORIA THEATRE.—The success of Mr. Charles Dillon at the Victoria Theatre continues unabated, the house being well filled on each evening of performance, while public appreciation of the actor's powers is evidenced by the heartiest applause. We have already noticed the decided triumphs achieved by Mr. Dillon in various Shakesperian parts, as also in the fine character of Virginius; and we have now to record an equal success in his impersonation of Beverley, in Edward Moore's affecting tragedy of the Gameter, which was produced last night, with the Three Musketeers as an afterpiece. By the way, Mr. Dillon must have wonderful physique to sustain two such heavy characters in one evening as Boverley and D'Artagnan; he is the only actor, indeed, that we remember since the time of Mr. Nesbitt, who was at all disposed to attempt such herculean work. In the part of Beverley there is fine scope for the display of the passions, and it is only doing Mr. Dillon justice to admit that the representation was in the highest degree truthful to nature.

and in keeping with the author's ideas. Mr. Warner as Stukoley, Mr. Burford as Jarvis, Mrs. Poole as Mrs. Beverley, and Mrs. Jones as Charlotte, rendered the cast a very effective one, and, as may be supposed, the piece gave great satisfaction to the audience. The after-play was short, well executed, and seemed to display the versatility of Mr. Dillon's dramatic genius, the character of L'Artagnan being in striking contrast with that of the ruined gambler. This evening (Friday) is set apart for the benefit of Mrs. Dillon, when a comedy, new to the Sydney public, entitled the "Artist of Florence," will be pro-lodged against the horse Traveller, in the late match at Randwick, was made known yesterday afternoon—the verdict being in favour of Traveller, who was consequently declared the winner of the race.
